FARMERS MANAGE DROUGHT WELL

Following almost a decade of drought in many areas of New South Wales, Suncorp Bank's General Manager Regional NSW, Stephen Morgan is impressed at how the vast majority of the Bank's farming customers have been able to 'tighten their belts' and manage through difficult economic and environmental conditions.

"We recognise that over the past two years people on the land have not only had to endure the global financial crisis, but also the ongoing effects of the drought. It's a testament to farmers' management skills that they have been able to withstand such a prolonged period of adverse seasons," he said.

"Given the widespread recent rains, we're very hopeful of a return to a series of profitable years for the rural community.

"At Suncorp Bank we understand the challenges of the land and we have continued to lend to farmers and producers for over 100 years."

To thank the community for their ongoing support, Suncorp Bank will host a series of seminars throughout regional NSW in March and April.

Included on the agenda will be an update on the economic outlook, and an overview of how the Bank views agriculture and the farming business. In addition, Kerry O'Keeffe, cricket commentator and media personality, will discuss the topic 'Overnight success only took 20 years'.
